Trimming Helps Maintain Reliable Service

Transmission lines coming in contact with tree branches is a leading cause of outages!

Vegetation management, particularly tree trimming, is a necessary part of providing reliable electric service. Power outages are often caused by tree limbs that either contact or fall on service lines. According to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, tree contact with transmission lines is a leading cause of electric power outages and a common cause of past regional blackouts.

Any power line contact with a tree limb can cause a short circuit. This is a real safety concern for residents. Tree trimming reduces the impact of major storms on electric service and power interruptions. It also removes dangerous limbs or trees, which enables easy access to equipment for faster and safer repairs, and prevents damage to equipment.

It is recommended for residents to plant trees and shrubs 15 to 30 feet away from power lines, and large trees more than 50 feet away. There are many guides available which can help recommend the best trees to plant near right-of-ways. The American Public Power Association's Tree Power Program (www.publicpower.org) and the Arbor Day Foundation (www.arborday.org) are excellent resources.

Do not attempt to prune trees or branches around electric lines yourself as any contact with lines can cause electrocution. Questions about tree trimming and utility vegetation management practices can be directed to 937-667-6305. ●
