Please, NO limbs, sticks, bricks, rocks or yard debris should be placed with the leaves in the street. These items cause damage to the equipment, create down time for repairs, and add delay to the leaf pickup schedule.

You Can Help Protect Your Local Water and Soil Quality by How You Build!

Conventional construction methods excavate an entire lot removing all the vegetation when building a new house. Excavating the entire lot was thought to be necessary to create a “clean slate” for things such as grading the site, moving equipment, installing utilities and designing new site drainage. Removing all of the vegetation makes it easy to work on the site but it isn’t the best thing for water quality or soil health.

Undeveloped land with trees and understory vegetation naturally absorbs rain water, preventing flooding, recharging the water table and cleaning the water as it percolates through the vegetation and natural soil structure.

It takes 500 years to create 1 inch of soil. This process of grading and excavating removes or damages nearby vegetation, changes the soil structure, alters natural drainage patterns and increases soil erosion. While it is necessary to disturb land when you build your new house, being selective on how and where you build on your lot makes a long-term difference on your local water and soil quality.

Your contractor should always implement local zoning permit requirements and building regulations into your project. For more information visit www.thecleanwaterbusiness.com. ●
